GT Window Products has made full use of the company's 20 years' expertise in ground-breaking component design to develop a new product making its debut at this year's FIT Show.

Two decades ago the business launched the GT Securi-Clip, which became the only recognised solution to help window and door fabricators meet vital tests that prevent sealed units from being forcibly removed.

The new component benefits from GT's rich heritage in security design coupled with the benefits of the latest tooling technology. The company believes it will be a game changer in the market for both manufacturers and fitters.

"We work very closely with fabricators," explains Carl Taylor, Managing Director of GT Windows Products. "So we know the difficulties they face meeting the latest stringent building regulations requirements, in particular Document Q which became active for new builds and extensions in October last year and includes PAS 24."

Carl added: "There is never a time when we aren't working on research and development to improve our products or develop new ones.

"In addition to delivering benefits for manufacturers we also need to consider fitters on site so that our components make installation quicker and easier. Our new product does all of this and we're really looking forward to launching it at The FIT Show.
